Hongkone, July 9th- 1889.

THE Chinese riots in Bangkok appear have been solely due to society or clan disputes, and the fighting, as well as all acts of violence, was confined to the partisans of the respective disputants. The riot developed, however, into one of most formidable propertions, some thousands of coolies being engaged in the flay, many of whom were furnished with firearms. Nor were they at all slack in using these, and much blood was spilt. Fortunately no serious attempt was made, even by the most rowdy of the helligerents, to interfere either with foreigners or with their property, and though the Rules of H.B.M. Supreme and other Courts Siamese police were wholly nowerless to restore order the troops found no great difficulty in scattering the rioters, upwards of 600 of whom were eventually taken prisopers, caught flagrante deliclo. As to the Regulations for the Consular Courts of United methods employed in hunting down the fugitives after they had been dispersed by the Siamese cavalry, it is to be feared that the latter were not very particular, and more blood was shed than seemed necessary; but it must not be forgotten, on Customs and Harbour Regulations for the dif- the other hand, that the riot was of an unusually determined and sanghinary nature. and it was imperative that the leaders at least should be arrested and such a blow struck at the organisation as would prevent them renewing the combat on the following Orders may be sent to Daily Press Office, where | day. These clan fouds among the Chinese are often of a most desperate character, and strong measures have to be adopted to suppress them. In Siam, where it is estimated there are at least a million Chinese, it is of course particularly desirable that these collisions should be averted. In the Memorandum of Kwei Jan, the Censor, and his co-adjutors, the number of men employed in cart and boat traffic between Tientsin and Tungchow is about 60,000, and allowing to each a family of five, that makes a total of 300,000 nersons depending on this trade for their daily rice. The Vicercy Chang thinks this estimate probably not excessive, and believes that at least half of them would be thrown out of employment by the introduction of the Ruilway. To come to the number of men to whom employment would be given by the introduction of the Rail. way, we find that England with her 40,000 K of rails, employs 165,000 railway men. At this rate, the Tientsin-Tungchow line, with its 200 lz. would only employ about 800 men. (4) A proposal has been made for a railway along the old bed of the Yellow River, passing through Tôh-chow and Teining Chow in Shantung. But the drifting sand of this country would be a bad foundation and repairs would be continually needed, causing a ruinous ex-F. Palmaio, M. Rodrigo, J. Foresel, and pense. The best place to build the first great M. Ho ens, described as a naemployed seamen, railway would be starting from Ink'ow Kine . Cross-examined by the Attorney General :- I were charged with being regues and vagabonds, outside Poking, to Honan, and on to Hankow in hada joint contract with plaintiff for 50 shares in squatting on the hill side, and damaging trees Hupah, about 2,000 li. This would be too far rethis line Would not necessitate the ramoval of many houses or graves to allow it to pass. It about Tls. 12,000,000, and the construction could extend through eight years. Iron quite good TUTLER, PALMER & Co. enough for the purpose could be obtained from iron, yet the employment of it would give the advantage of China's money being spent in China instead of abroad. The above are only a few of the sailent points of this interesting memorandum, which will doubtless appear in extense in the Peking Gazette. They are extracted by the N. C. Daily, News from the Hu-pao of 30th June.
